Tradition

Renowned chef and cookbook author Alice Waters single-handedly changed our perception of food and its preparation. Her commitment to use only simple, healthful, natural ingredients at Chez Panisse, the acclaimed Berkeley, California restaurant she opened in 1971, transformed America's tastes.

The nationally recognized humanitarian established the Chez Panisse Foundation, taking her message to schools. The Edible Schoolyard, Waters' pilot school project in Berkeley, teaches youngsters the joys of growing, cooking and sharing food. She began the program as a model for America's schools, where shifts in thought begin, one bite at a time.
